

A Journey in Ireland (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from A Journey in Ireland
On April 18th, 1921, I went to Ireland, returning to England on May 10th. The sketches and conversations embodied in the following chapters are the result of a journey undertaken with the single object of studying the state of the country and the state of feeling in the country, as to which newspapers contradicted each other and propaganda and partisanship persistently vied. How far this could be done in so short a space of time the reader may judge for himself. I can only add that I made every endeavour to meet and to talk with persons of all shades of opinion and of all classes, hoping that there-from would emerge a just picture of Ireland in the extraordinary phase - unique, one might suppose, in the history of national movements - which ended with the truce of July, 1921.
