

Genealogical Pram: Two children of capitalism

This work explores the changing functionality context of charity and NSMs (New Social Movements) The two children of capitalism loved by the naive left, questioning the complex relationships between capitalism and alternative discourses. Taking into consideration the historical aspects of charity and NSMs, in conjunction with social and functional myths this short discussion considers the allusive, symbolic and literal representation of charity and NSMs throughout literature. This critical review uses the theories of Foucault, Hardt and Negri to engage in the debate about the function of charity and NSMs in contemporary global capitalist society. In conclusion, this piece argues that capitalism has modified and institutionalised an alternative discourse that poses a threat to its ideology, and that charity and NSMs are a functional part of the global capitalist society.
