

Letters From Ireland, 1886 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Letters From Ireland, 1886

The object of the tour which I undertook last autumn was to enquire into the state of Ireland socially and politically. The result will be found in the following pages. I trust the occasional references I have made to the great attractions which that country offers to the tourist, may induce some to spend their holiday there this year. Of one thing I can assure them - they need have no fear of being shot, or of meeting with any unpleasantness; for though there is an unmeaning hatred of the Saxon in the aggregate, the individual Englishman is well and cordially received, and the more intercourse that takes place between the two peoples, the more likely is that hatred to disappear. I am indebted to The Times for permission to republish the Letters. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
