

Loves Transcendence and the Problem of Theodicy (Religion in Philosophy & Theology)

Since the problem of theodicy concerns all dimensions of human existence and cannot be reduced to a logical problem of consistency, it cannot be resolved by means of a theodicy, a rational defense of God before the tribunal of human reason. But how can we deal with the wound of negativity? Claudia Welz explores responses that do not end up in a theodicy. Instead of asking about the origin and sense (or non-sense) of evil and suffering, she considers Gods (non)phenomenality, the dialectics of Gods givenness and hiddenness. Neither God nor evil is given as such; rather, God and evil are determined for someone as something within specific contexts of experience. How does God appear in human life, and how is his phenomenal presence or non-presence related to the ambiguities of our lives? In the center of the book, Kierkegaards and Rosenzweigs answers, their reasons for having no reason to defend God and their ethics of love are discussed between German idealism and French phenomenology. Both of them follow Kants practical turn of the problem of theodicy, oppose Hegels theodicy through history and anticipate Levinas idea to look for the traces of Gods transcendence in human movements of self-transcendence. Moreover, they have remarkable contributions to the current debates on metaphysics of presence and onto-theology. In dialogue with Levinas, the presence of Gods love is in question, in dialogue with Derrida Gods presence as a gift, and in dialogue with Marion the gift of Gods presence as a so-called saturated self-giving phenomenon. In conclusion to these discussions, theology is developed as semiotic phenomenology of the Invisible.
